National Aviation Research and Technology Park (NARTP)

The National Aviation Research and Technology Park (NARTP) is a 501(c)(3) non-profit auxiliary organization of Stockton University dedicated to facilitating research and development, innovation, and commercialization of emerging aviation technologies.

The park is located on a 58 acre parcel adjoining the Federal Aviation Administration William J. Hughes Technical Center (WJHTC), a facility dedicated to research, development, and sustainment of the National Airspace System (NAS), and the Atlantic City International Airport, a designated Smart Airport Research Test Bed Facility.

The WJHTC houses every system in use today in U.S. commercial aviation and is involved in system development and testing of NextGen systems, airport and aircraft safety research, and Homeland Security research.

Location on the WJHTC campus presents a tremendous opportunity for tenants of the NARTP to partner with the FAA and leverage the incredible facilities and expertise that reside there. The WJHTC is the leading air transportation federal facility and the site of innovative, state-of-the-art research, development, testing, evaluation, modeling, and simulation. The WJHTC has recognized expertise in automation, communications, navigation, and airport and aircraft safety and has served as the cornerstone for aviation advancements for over fifty years.

The center is the key facility for the development of Aviation Research including the integration of Unmanned Aircraft Systems (UAS). The WJHTC is responsible for integrating all new systems, concepts and technologies into the NAS and will use NARTP to build new partnerships between academia, industry and the FAA to foster collaborative R&D. Tenants of the NARTP will also have the opportunity to interface and partner with the other aviation tenants that reside on the campus.
